2 — Today's Market-Moving News

■ IRAN / STRAIT OF HORMUZ — Oil surges 5% as deal collapses

Iran's Foreign Minister Araghchi declared Monday that Tehran will NOT reopen the Strait of Hormuz unless the U.S. lifts its naval blockade, pays war-damage compensation, and ends sanctions. The strait — a chokepoint for ~20% of global oil supply — has been effectively closed since a late-February Iran–U.S. military conflict erupted. Only 8–15 vessels crossing daily vs. ~130 pre-conflict. WTI crude jumped ~5% to $82.13; Brent hit $87.72. President Trump told Axios the U.S. is 'only semi-negotiating' and will lean on the naval blockade as leverage.

■ INTEL (INTC) — Down 3–5% on $15 billion share offering

Intel launched its first public share sale since its 1971 IPO — $15B in common stock (plus a 30-day $2.25B overallotment option). Proceeds fund AI-related capital expenditures after Intel raised its 2026 capex guidance from $18B to >$20B. The offering increases share count by ~3%, diluting existing holders. Shares slid to ~$96–97, below the psychological $100 mark. Market concern: Intel must generate AI-cycle ROI exceeding cost of capital before investors are satisfied, and that timeline remains unclear.

■ NVIDIA (NVDA) — Modest pullback after blockbuster prior week

After the Nasdaq surged 5.2% last week — Nvidia contributing ~2.33% gain — NVDA experienced shallow profit-taking Monday. The retreat is technical, not fundamental: AI compute demand remains robust and NVDA reports earnings August 26. AMD and the broader semiconductor complex followed lower, with Intel sector contagion adding marginal pressure.

■ CRITICAL MINERALS — Multiple stocks surge on White House $2B+ mining investment

The White House announced late Friday >$2B in new domestic mining and mining-related investment, triggering a rally in rare-earth and critical-mineral stocks Monday: 5E Advanced Materials (FEAM), MP Materials (MP), Energy Fuels (UUUU), US Antimony (UAMY), Critical Metals (CRML), and USA Rare Earth (USAR) all advanced. The policy push aligns with ongoing domestic supply-chain security strategy tied to semiconductor and defense supply chains amid ongoing China tension.

■ PRIOR FRIDAY CONTEXT — Weak July jobs drove best week since April

July nonfarm payrolls showed a surprise net job loss of –23,000 — the first contraction since the COVID-era. Markets interpreted this as confirming the Fed will hold rates longer (reducing hike risk) and revived mild rate-cut expectations for late 2026. The S&P; 500 ended Friday +0.6% at 7,757.64; Nasdaq +1.3% at 26,690.62. For the full week: S&P; +3.6%, Nasdaq +5.2% — best weekly performance since April 2026.

■ FED / MACRO — Rates at 3.50–3.75%; July CPI report due Wednesday

FOMC held rates at 3.50%–3.75% at its July 29 meeting. June CPI: +3.5% YoY; core CPI: +2.6%. July CPI (due Wed Aug 12) consensus: +3.4% YoY, core +2.5%. Prediction market traders give <55% probability CPI comes in above 3.3%. If tame, the Fed-hold narrative is confirmed; if hot, stagflation fear returns given oil at $82+ and supply-chain pressures from the Hormuz closure.

3 — News → Today's SPY/QQQ Moves

Driver	SPY Effect	QQQ Effect	Mechanism
Iran/Hormuz — Oil +5%	–0.05% drag	–0.05% drag	Higher energy costs raise margins for transport, manufacturing; risk-off to
Intel –4% ($15B dilution)	~–0.03% (small S&P weight)	~–0.10% (INTC ~2% QQQ)	Direct index weight drag + sector sentiment chill on AI capex spend retur
Nvidia pullback –1–2%	~–0.04% drag	~–0.15% drag	NVDA ~5% QQQ weight; shallow profit-taking after +5.2% Nasdaq week
Critical minerals rally	~+0.02% offset	Negligible	Small-cap names, minimal SPY/QQQ index weight; sentiment positive
Weak July jobs (Friday)	No incremental Mon	No incremental Mon	Already priced in Friday rally; dovish residue cushions but does not rever

Bottom line: Monday's modest –0.10% SPY / –0.30% QQQ decline was driven primarily by (a) oil's 5% surge on Hormuz impasse amplifying energy-cost inflation fears, (b) Intel's dilutive offering weighing on tech-heavy QQQ, and (c) Nvidia profit-taking following last week's sharp rally. Critical-mineral gains and lingering dovish jobs sentiment partially offset but could not overcome the combined drag.

5 — Next-Day & Week-Ahead Scenarios

Aug 10 had no major scheduled releases. Key catalysts are Wed Aug 12 (CPI), Thu Aug 13 (PPI + AMAT earnings), Fri Aug 14 (Retail Sales + UMich Sentiment), and the ongoing Iran/Hormuz wildcard.

CATALYST 1 — July CPI (Wednesday, Aug 12, 8:30 AM ET)

→ IF tame — headline ≤3.3%, core ≤2.4% → BULLISH

Prediction markets already lean this direction (~55% probability, per Kalshi data). Confirms disinflation progress → bond yields fall → growth stocks re-rate higher. SPY likely +0.5% to +1.5%; QQQ could pop +1% to +2%. Fed rate-cut expectations for Sep/Nov 2026 repriced meaningfully. Combined with weak July jobs, this cements the 'soft landing' narrative. Semiconductors and high-multiple tech names the biggest beneficiaries.

→ IF hot — headline ≥3.5%, core ≥2.6% → BEARISH

Stagflation narrative returns hard: oil at $82 (Hormuz closure) + sticky core inflation = Fed cannot cut, may need to hike. Yields spike, duration risk hammers growth stocks. SPY likely –1% to –2%; QQQ –1.5% to –3%. Energy (XOM, CVX) benefits as inflation hedge. This scenario would particularly damage QQQ given elevated valuations in AI names.

→ IF in-line — 3.4% headline, 2.5% core → NEUTRAL to SLIGHT POSITIVE

The softness from weak jobs already priced in. A confirming CPI at consensus = 'buy the confirmation' → SPY +0.1–0.3%. Market looks through to Thursday's AMAT earnings.

CATALYST 2 — Applied Materials (AMAT) Earnings (Thursday, Aug 13, after close)

→ IF BEAT — EPS >$3.39, rev >$9B, guide raised → BULLISH for semis/QQQ

AMAT has beaten estimates 4 consecutive quarters. A beat confirms the AI capex cycle is intact: wafer fab equipment demand is accelerating, not peaking. AMAT rallies 5–8%; semiconductor sector (NVDA, AMD, LRCX, KLAC) follows. QQQ +0.5–1% Friday open; bullish read-through into Nvidia's Aug 26 report.

→ IF MISS or cautious guide — EPS <$3.25 or soft Q4 outlook → BEARISH

Semis sell off sharply: AMAT –8–12%, sector –2–5%. QQQ –1 to –1.5% Friday. Revives questions about AI capex cycle sustainability. High shock value: consensus is very optimistic (+35.5% EPS growth); any miss would expose how much forward expectation is already baked in at ~$539/share.

CATALYST 3 — Iran / Strait of Hormuz (Ongoing Wild-Card)

→ IF deal announced or Hormuz reopens → OIL CRASHES, STOCKS RALLY

Oil collapses 8–15% quickly. S&P; 500 +1.5–2.5%; Nasdaq +2–3%. Transport/airline stocks surge (fuel cost relief). Energy sector paradoxically falls 4–6% (losing the premium). This is the single biggest potential positive macro catalyst for the week.

→ IF escalation — new military incident or Iran closes shipping further → RISK-OFF

Oil spikes above $90+ Brent. S&P; –1.5 to –2.5%; Nasdaq –2 to –3%. Safe havens (gold, Treasuries) bid. Airline, logistics, consumer stocks hit hard. Energy stocks gain 4–6% as inflation hedge. Watch Trump naval posture statements.

CATALYST 4 — PPI + Retail Sales + UMich Sentiment (Thu/Fri, Aug 13–14)

→ IF soft-landing trifecta — PPI cool + Retail Sales hold + UMich up

Confirms the Fed-hold + consumer-resilience narrative. SPY likely finishes the week at or above $775, extending the July 28–Aug 7 rally. Yields fall, QQQ outperforms. Strong macro backdrop into Nvidia earnings Aug 26.

→ IF stagflation combo — PPI hot + Retail Sales miss

Stagflation fear re-emerges. SPY gives back a chunk of last week's 3.6% gain. Particularly damaging if combined with a hot CPI Wednesday — compounding the narrative of 'inflation still too high, growth faltering simultaneously.'
